HAPPY V-E DAY!

First off, I want to say Congratulations to All of the Greatest Generation that this World has ever known.

May 8th is the Celebration of Victory in Europe!

Without the American Military, and the tremendous Men and Woman who participated in helping to defeat Nazi Germany, and save Europe in the process, the World would a very different place today.

You have our steadfast thanks and total admiration for your service, love of Country – and complete devotion to Freedom and what it Stands For!

WE PROUDLY SALUTE YOU!

PREFACE: We here are very thankful for the readership that we have generated in our short time in the Newsletter Arena. So much so, that we would like to reprint an except that one of our most astute readers sent in yesterday.

With her permission, we note some of her comments and observations below.

ON WITH THE SHOW!

Hi Larry

LOVE the new site. PERFECT!!

Now some comments on your latest Newsletter:

You know I have been saying since last year, when I saw the weak lineup of candidates the Democrats put up against the seemingly invincible Trump and his roaring economy, that the clever foxes were up to something quite extraordinarily cunning.

Yep! Michelle to come riding in to save the day at the last minute during a brokered convention. Over the months, and especially since the Wuhan Virus plan, to destroy everything that would get Trump reelected, I have revised my opinion on what the cabal is planning.

I still think that the original plan of the powers that control everything about our political system is being followed. That goal is to bring the Obamas back to the White House in order to accelerate the demise of our US Democratic Republic, weaken its position in the world, instill socialism and the government takeover of industry/commerce/healthcare, etc.

But, I no longer believe the white horse will ride in at the Convention. I think Biden will continue on the ticket, while the media and the party prop him up, cover up his blunders, and bury his misdeeds abroad and with the indiscretions of his past.

At this point, 40% of the Democratic voters think someone should replace Biden, and since there are no dynamically viable female choices for VP, among the current group mentioned, he will announce Michelle as his running mate whenever his poll numbers begin to sag.

I think it would be VERY risky for the party to replace Biden with Michelle at this point in time, as the Presidential candidate, since many would feel she doesn't have the experience to run the country or that it would be too upsetting so late in the game.

It would also force her to do town halls and debates and TV interviews, etc. So I think she will stay as the VP candidate through to the election. This will give Joe Biden enough votes to win the election, as the doubters will come around, knowing that the Obamas would be in the background to support a weak Biden and the ease with which they could manipulate him to do what they tell him to do.

They will get the entire party to rally behind the "Beat Trump" cry, reignite the youth vote, consolidate the Black community behind them (or risk being seen as traitors to their race by not supporting Michelle), win the total Hispanic vote (as well as illegals and felons who will be able to cast votes), enough of the Independents, and the vast majority of the women who are either looking for a "sweeter," more erudite, and slicker-talking leader to win back international respect -- or just to get a female close to the top of the heap.

Within a short amount of time after his inauguration, Biden will announce that he is stepping down due to medical conditions that prevent him from capably handling the stress and vigor of the position.

He will either have a "heart attack" or will have medical professionals reveal that he has developed dementia or the beginning stages of Alzheimer's.

Biden will give a tearful goodbye and Michelle will immediately take over as President -- without having to campaign or debate with Trump!

I don't know whether she will be able to appoint a VP, but if she does have that power, she will not bring in Barack. That would generate all kinds of legal wrangling and keep their

I do predict that she would select a woman to that position if it is necessary to appoint a VP, or even Bernie Sanders to help her swing the entire country farther to the far left.

I don't think Pelosi is young enough, popular enough, or bright enough to even be considered by Michelle or the rest of the cabal. She will remain Speaker, because the Republicans will never regain the House in November.

Michelle will, however, give Barack a more important position, like Secretary of State -- or nominate him to the Supreme Court to replace Ginsburg who will step aside with glee, just to see her political legacy continue.

And the rest of the story will be: The United States of America we grew up in and have loved with all our hearts and many of us (like you) have fought for will be gone forever, and WE ARE SCREWED!

So those are my thoughts and I'm stickin' to them!

Please, God.... let me eat crow in November and apologize for my crazy conspiratorial misconceptions.

But... I will take your advice and continue to think positively.

Thanks for listening to my ramblings. Love you, Larry!

At this point, I wrote her a response, which I won't re-print here, because it is of little relevance – but this is her reply to my email:

Well, thank you, Larry, for your kind remarks. And you gave me more to think about:

First, I'm going to bet that the Democrats will run with Biden. Not enough time to bring in another candidate, and that would cost them too much money to prepare, present and promote.

The press is still consumed with the Wuhan Virus coverage and the party would have to spend millions of advertising dollars, which would not be necessary if they stuck with Biden. They just have to keep his mouth shut, restrict his appearances and interviews, and ride it out till November.

Choosing Michelle as the running mate will generate lots of free publicity and news coverage, thrills up the leg of Chris Matthews, non-stop fawning, and exaggerated excitement within the party.

Everyone will agree Biden has dementia but needs to be elected as the only way to get the Obamas back in the Oval Office saddle again.

As for the Biden-Trump debates, should it even happen, it will probably be done remotely. That means that Biden will be in his basement with lots of support behind the Zoom camera.

They can find out what the questions will be (a la Donna Brazil tactics) and they will write his answers on cue cards so all he has to do is read the answers. He will look strong and sane. They will write in certain barbs or goads in order to get Trump riled up and Trump will bury himself in his own heap of crazy rhetoric.

Biden will come across as the stronger/saner/better choice by contrast, which will pull in the undecided and Independent voters. Michelle will continue with Barack to go on news broadcasts, talk and late night shows and have their photos plastered on all the magazines and newspapers.

And I can see the bumper stickers already: BIDEN AND OBAMA - GREAT AGAIN!

Thanks again for all you do, Larry!

As you say, keep thinking positive!

It is readers like this that make us here really feel like maybe we are actually doing something worthwhile at that. To have people like this, to take her time to write something in such detail, is very rewarding indeed.

One confession I have to make. I have know this lovely lady for over 40 years – and she, and her Japanese husband – are the best of the best. They have worked their whole life, scrimped and saved and are now retired – but still working as hard as ever.

These are the type of people that make America – and Japan – two of the greatest countries in the world!

Sorry for this inclusion, but I wanted to share how in-depth so many of our readers really are!

SOME EXTRA BITS AND PIECES

With regard to saving money, in these desperate financial times, another reader suggested – for people over 65 who still have a mortgage – that they might consider a reverse mortgage – to give them financial security until they pass on. He has done this very thing, and now has enough money to keep he and his wife going for the rest of their lives.

If this approach sounds interesting – proceed with caution. Go to a reputable BANK and inquire as to the best procedure to take.

Another reader suggested that, with regard to better health, eat as many fruits and vegetables as possible. Red meat is not good for most people – and it is much more expensive to boot. Also, this would help to avoid expensive medical bills.

Also, a doctor friend of mine, another Newsletter subscriber, recommended using vitamin D as a food supplement. He says it is one of the best things to help keep you in good health.

And finally, another subscriber has given us some detailed suggestions with regard to the structure and format of this Newsletter – so if you notice subtle changes, you will know why.

Finally, all of us would like to sincerely thank all our readers for keeping in touch with us with your kind comments, ideas and suggestions – and continued positive support.

Let's HOPE that together we can truly MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!

That is it for now. Take care, stay safe and keep thinking positive!

Until next time, Sayonara from Kobe, Japan!
